Women who Embezzle Or Defraud Dorothy Zietz, 1981

This study was originally designed to determine whether the generalizations about male embezzlers made by Cressey in Other People's Money 1953 would also apply to women. Later the study was expanded to include an exploration of characteristics of women who were convicted of similar property offenses such as fraud, forgery, and grand theft. A study of a sample of inmates at the California Institute for Women identified four different systems of behavior among honest women, i.e., those who did not intend to steal: who embezzled, 1. the obsessive protectors, 2. romantic dreamers, 3. greedy opportunists, and 4. victims of pressure or persuasion. Women who intended to steal or defraud were categorized as vindictive, self servers, asocial, entrepreneurs, and reluctant offenders. Findings appear to indicate that typologies developed by Cressey and others based on male samples are not wholly applicable to women. There are similarities and differences in the problems faced by men and women who violate financial trust and in their rationalizations to justify their criminal behavior. More extensive research is needed to determine whether these findings can be considered valid for a larger group of women. Booklegger Magazine, 1976. The Next Whole Earth Catalog Stewart Brand, 1980.
