Respect is a two-way street. I should be shown respect and I need to show respect to others.
Here are some ways that you can show respect to others.

Keep focus on a task without distractions.	Thoughtfully listen to the views and opinions of others.	Apply my best effort to tasks.	Participate in democratic voting.	Be curious about what others know and share.
Respect my own and others' property.	Accept and act on feedback to improve my learning.	Take responsibility by remembering all of your equipment.	Give support to others when they need it.	Take care of my mind and my body by making healthy choices.
Assess and manage risk.	Work independently.	Share resources.	Show care and compassion towards others.	Follow rules.
Stand up for what you believe is right, especially when it affects the wellbeing of yourself or others.	Show curiosity by asking questions.	Reflect on your actions, words and behaviours. Are they fair and appropriate?	Use appropriate body language to show I am listening.	Listen carefully and avoid interrupting others.

Strong partnerships between home and school are essential for coordinating high quality care and education and for supporting young children's development. This research sought to explore the multidimensional nature of parent teacher or cocaring relationships for families utilizing full time center based childcare for their infants or toddlers. A model of coparenting or how parents work together in their roles as parents served as the main theoretical framework for this investigation. In the first phase of the study 10 parent teacher dyads participated in semi structured interviews about a specific cocaring relationship. In this sample all families were receiving subsidized childcare. Using an iterative inductive analysis as well as a deductive analysis based on definitions of key coparenting dimensions three main cocaring themes were identified: communication support vs undermining and childrearing agreement vs disagreement. In the second phase 90 parents of infants and toddlers, about a fourth of whom were receiving subsidized childcare, completed questionnaires about a specific cocaring relationship, their parental involvement, the quality of their relationship with their child, and the child's social and emotional functioning. Exploratory factor analysis of the questionnaire developed to assess the cocaring relationship revealed a three factor structure: Support, Undermining, and Endorsement Agreement. In regression analyses, after controlling for parents' education, parents' perceptions of cocaring support were positively related to all forms of parental involvement: home based, school based, and home school connections. Parents' perceptions of undermining were also positively related to school based involvement, whereas perceptions of endorsement agreement were positively related to home school connections. In addition, when parents characterized their cocaring relationships as more supportive or higher in endorsement agreement, parent child closeness was higher. However, parents' perception of greater undermining in the cocaring relationship was associated with lower parent child closeness. Regression analyses also revealed that after controlling for parent child closeness and conflict, undermining in the cocaring relationship was associated with higher levels of child dysregulation. This research lends validity to the cocaring construct and adds to our understanding of the importance of early parent teacher relationships for children and families.

Majerus, 2011 Elementary educators searching for strategies to improve student achievement may benefit from examining the relationship between parents and classroom teachers The literature indicates that parent involvement may be linked to student achievement attendance student motivation and student self esteem Likewise parents who have a positive relationship with their child s teacher may also be associated with an increase in their child s academic achievement The intent of this study was to create an instrument to measure parents perceptions of their relationship with their child s classroom teacher An initial instrument was developed based upon a review of the literature on parent involvement in schools and on parent teacher relationships The instrument was administered to 945 parents from a mid size Midwestern school district A 26 item four factor instrument was developed through the use of factor analysis The Parent Teacher Relationship Survey provides classroom teachers and principals the opportunity to gather data to gain an understanding of parents perceptions of their child s classroom teacher Furthermore use of the survey could help determine whether a correlation exists between parents positive perceptions of their child s classroom teacher and increased student achievement If a positive correlation exists teachers and administrators will have concrete evidence regarding the importance of the parent teacher relationship Having this information will greatly help educators in their efforts to help every child achieve to his or her potential
