

Infertility and Impaired Fecundity in the United States, 1982–2010: Data From the National Survey of Family Growth

by Anjani Chandra, Ph.D., and Casey E. Copen, Ph.D., National Center for Health Statistics; and Elizabeth Hervey Stephen, Ph.D., Georgetown University

Abstract

Objectives—This report presents nationally representative estimates and trends for infertility and impaired fecundity—two measures of fertility problems—among women aged 15–44 in the United States. Data are also presented on a measure of infertility among men aged 15–44.

Methods—Data for this report come primarily from the 2006–2010 National Survey of Family Growth (NSFG), which consisted of 22,682 interviews with men and women aged 15–44, conducted from June 2006 through June 2010. The response rate for women in the 2006–2010 NSFG was 78%, and for men was 75%. Selected trends are shown based on prior NSFG years.

Results—The percentage of married women aged 15–44 who were infertile fell from 8.5% in 1982 (2.4 million women) to 6.0% (1.5 million) in 2006–2010. Impaired fecundity among married women aged 15–44 increased from 11% in 1982 to 15% in 2002, but decreased to 12% in 2006–2010. Among all women, 11% had impaired fecundity in 2006–2010. Both infertility and impaired fecundity remain closely associated with age for nulliparous women. Among married, nulliparous women aged 35–44, the percentage infertile declined from 44% in 1982 to 27% in 2006–2010, reflecting greater delays in childbearing over this period. Among married women in 2006–2010, non-Hispanic black women were more likely to be infertile than non-Hispanic white women. Some form of infertility (either subfertility or nonsurgical sterility) was reported by 9.4% of men aged 15–44 and 12% of men aged 25–44 in 2006–2010, similar to levels seen in 2002.

Keywords: current fertility problems • nonsurgical sterility • male fertility problems • demographic trends

Introduction

As part of its overall mission to collect data on fertility and the intermediate factors that explain birth rates in the United States, the National Survey of Family Growth (NSFG) has provided two population-based, nationally representative measures for fertility problems: infertility (since 1973) and impaired fecundity (since 1982) (1–4). Infertility is defined as a lack of pregnancy in the 12 months prior to survey, despite having had unprotected sexual intercourse in each of those months with the same husband or partner. Impaired fecundity is defined as physical difficulty in either getting pregnant or carrying a pregnancy to live birth. NSFG data are used to monitor the prevalence and correlates of infertility and to evaluate the use, efficacy, and safety of infertility services and treatments. The survey is also used in research on the causes of infertility and provides information to guide programs for the primary and secondary prevention of infertility among women and men (4,5).

This report presents trends and national estimates for both NSFG-based measures of fertility problems among women, and one measure of infertility among men, in the United States, using the most recently available data from the 2006–2010 NSFG. By using a standardized approach to monitoring the prevalence of impaired fecundity among all women aged 15–44 since 1982, and 12-month infertility among married women since 1973, NSFG provides demographic “snapshots” of the impact of societal trends such as delayed marriage and childbearing, and tracks
