Evolutionary Dynamics of a Natural Population B. Rosemary Grant, Peter R. Grant, 1989-11-14 The result of one of the most detailed and careful examinations of the behavior and ecology of a vertebrate ever conducted in the wild this study addresses one of the major questions in evolutionary biology why do some populations vary so much in morphological ecological behavioral and physiological traits By documenting the full range of variation within one population of a species and investigating the causal factors Rosemary and Peter Grant provide impressive evidence that species are capable of evolutionary change within observable periods of time Among the most dramatic examples of recent speciation and adaptive diversification are Darwin s Finches which live in the Gal pagos Islands Darwin theorized that these closely related birds had evolved from a common ancestor to fill the available ecological niches on this remote archipelago Not only have they evolved into thirteen species but more recent study has shown that many of them exhibit striking variation in beak structure and other traits For more than a decade the Grants have studied one of these species the large cactus finch on the isolated Isla Genovesa They present information on the environment and demographic features of the population then discuss the range of genetic ecological and behavioral factors responsible for the unusually large morphological variation They place the large cactus finch in its community setting to better understand its evolution and conclude by discussing the implications of the study for the genetic structure of small populations and the problems of conserving them They illustrate their findings with an array of drawings tables and photographs
