Size and Efficiency in Farming A. H. Maunier, University of Oxford. Agricultural Economics Research Institute, University of Oxford. Institute for Research in Agricultural Economics, 1952 The Relationship Between Farm Size and Efficiency in South African Agriculture Colin Thirtle, 1999 November 1995 Commercial farms in South Africa could become significantly more efficient if they became smaller The government could encourage that trend by removing policies and distortions that favor large over small farms Drawing on international evidence van Zyl Binswanger and Thirtle discuss the sources of economies of scale Using representative farm level survey data for South Africa's six major grain producing areas and one irrigation area for the period 1975-90 they Describe the structure of South African agriculture detailing the distribution of farm sizes and results from previous studies of farm size efficiency Analyze the evidence on scale efficiency in the former homelands Analyze the relationship between farm size and efficiency in commercial farming and discuss how policy affects that relationship Clearly policy has a crucial impact on the relationship between farm size and efficiency They find that Farms in the former homelands seem to be scale inefficient which is unsurprising given the historical lack of access to support services and infrastructure policies that discriminate against farmers in the homelands and the extremely fragmented and limited land use rights of farmers there There is an inverse relationship between farm size and efficiency in the commercial farming areas for the range of farms analyzed regardless what method is used This inverse relationship seems to become stronger and more accentuated as policy distortions which tend to favor large farms over small ones are removed Large farms tend to use more capital intensive methods of production while smaller farms are more labor intensive And managerial ability seems to be better on larger farms There is an inverse relationship between farm size and efficiency in South African agriculture despite South Africa's history of policies favoring relatively large mechanized farms Clearly efficiency gains could be significant if commercial farms became smaller To encourage that trend policies and distortions that favor large farms over small should be removed This paper a product of the Office of the Director Agriculture and Natural Resources Department is part of a larger effort in the department to design appropriate strategies for land reform

Farm Size-Productivity Relationship in Post Green Revolution Punjab Dr. Livneet Shergill, 2022-10-01 This book seeks to examine the nature and dynamics of the farm size productivity relationship which is one of the central questions in Indian agriculture It is generally believed that big farms are more productive than small farms In 1962 noble laureate A K Sen's seminal paper on the subject busted this popularly held view He put forth the thesis that Indian agriculture exhibits inverse farm size productivity relationship implying thereby that small farms produce more output per acre as compared to big farms With the advent of Green revolution technology this debate once again erupted among the Indian economists Green

Revolution was most successful in Punjab the frontrunner in the usage of modern agricultural practices and modern farm machinery Therefore Punjab was the state which could provide the best insight into the farm size productivity relationship under Green Revolution This book makes an effort to test whether the farm size productivity inverse relationship that existed in traditional Indian agriculture is still holding on in this modern period or had disappeared with Punjab as the focus of study

Myth of Large-farm Superiority ,1996 In Poland present policies are aimed at promoting large mechanized farms over smaller family farms These policies are based on the perception that large farms offer real economies of scale But international evidence indicates that such large mechanized farms are generally less efficient and use less labor than small family farms The authors analyzed the relationship between farm size and efficiency in Polish agriculture They used two different methods to do so First they determined differences in total factor productivity between small and large farms They then used Data Envelope Analysis to estimate scale efficiencies The results show that for the sample of farms analyzed 1 large farms are not more efficient than smaller farms and 2 smaller farms are more labor intensive than larger farms These results have important policy implications for farm restructuring in Poland and other transition economies facing similar issues and conditions
