The Crumbling Walls:

This Bleeding Heart of Mine Errol St. John Stephenson, 2012-12-05 In the poets words which project a clear image of the ghetto environment and evoke the introverted feelings of a community exasperated by its situation and their ultimate solution for escape came their denial and confused ideology In my hand there is a gun Deep deep in my heart there is revenge The cry is agonizing stained by frustration It is the reflection of a society warped by social injustice of minds poisoned by revenge As a nation our conscience is pricked by the poets scorching words We are moved by the embarrassing plights of our brothers We are touched by his grief in Unemployed concerned for his welfare and future a dark illusion We travel through his mind to spiritual world and hear his questioning prayer How Long I Pray As he unravels his mind we are engulfed in his humane nature we hear his talk about his Friend then we are wrapped up into romanticism We perceive his erotic desires and feelings in My Woman Indeed we can see variety of its theme and conclude this is someone having experienced life in its fullness This book of poems comes at a time when our nation is once again undergoing a transition and will no doubt serve as a stimulant to our minds Its theme and message will at the most evoke that humane nature deep within us motivated to help someone from a miserable condition now that we are aware of it Invariably the aim of the poet is to garner this response to this critical problem which he himself has experienced over time
