Abstract: This paper discusses the role of language in the development of the self. It argues that the self is not a fixed entity, but rather a process that is shaped by the way we use language. The author examines the relationship between the self and the social world, and how language helps us to understand and navigate this relationship. The paper concludes by suggesting that language is a powerful tool for self-creation and transformation.

■ Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, 30-min, 3 times per week, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either an exercise or control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, 30-min, 3 times per week, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program. The control group performed no exercise. The subjects were assessed for physical fitness at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly greater improvements in physical fitness than the control group. The improvements in physical fitness were maintained at 12 weeks. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, 30-min, 3 times per week, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program is an effective means of improving physical fitness in sedentary, middle-aged women.
