

Dress for Success

Business attire is whatever you are expected to wear at a job. What's considered appropriate attire varies from industry to industry, and job to job; however, there are a few standards that apply no matter where you work.

Type of business attire

Business attire can range from very formal to very casual, depending on the business and situation. Here is a quick reference guide to the different types of business attire.

Casual: Casual business attire can be described as most people's everyday wardrobe. This can include jeans, T-shirts, or open-toed shoes, though when worn in a business setting, these clothes should still be clean and in good shape.

Smart casual: Smart casual dress is similar to Casual in its flexibility, but with a "step up" in neatness. For instance, smart casual dress may include jeans with a button-down shirt rather than a T-shirt.

Business casual: This is the most common type of business attire. Business casual often includes dress pants (khakis or slacks) or skirts, button-down or collared shirts, and closed-toed shoes. Business casual is a safe choice if you're not sure about the dress code.

Business professional: Business professional attire is common in businesses that have a stricter dress code. Business professional attire typically includes a suit and tie for men and a suit or blazer and blouse with slacks or skirt for women.

Business formal: Similar to "black tie," business formal dress is typically reserved for formal settings, such as award ceremonies, galas, and other evening events.

Dressing for an interview

When you're dressing for a job interview and aren't sure of the dress code, it's generally best to err on the side of formality. This typically means business professional attire, though in many industries, business casual is acceptable. Casual and smart casual are never acceptable for interviews.
