

1. Establishment of objectives to be attained-overall and departmental, sectional or individual
2. Establishment of planning premises. Premises may be internal or external
3. Identification of alternatives, taking into mind the minimum preliminary criteria i.e. capital investment, government, government controls, matching with present business market conditions, skilled workers and techniques available
4. Evaluation of alternatives- done in terms of profitability, risks involved, capital investment, gestation period, keeping in mind the negative and positive points of the plan
5. Choice of alternatives – the best one, more than one alternative may be selected
6. Formulating derivative plans for each segment of the company
7. Establishing sequence of activities

Criticisms of Planning

Although planning is an important managerial function with widespread use, five major arguments have been directed against planning:

- ❖ Planning may create rigidity.
- ❖ Plans can't be developed for a dynamic environment.
- ❖ Formal plans can't replace intuition and creativity.
- ❖ Planning focuses managers' attention on today's competition, not on tomorrow's survival.
- ❖ Formal planning reinforces success, which may lead to failure.

The external environment is constantly changing. Therefore managers should develop plans that are specific, but flexible. Managers must also recognize that planning is an ongoing process, and they should be willing to change directions if environmental conditions warrant. Flexibility is particularly important. Managers must remain alert to environmental changes that could impact the effective implementation of plans, and they must be prepared to make changes as needed.

TOPIC

THE STAFFING FUNCTION

Staffing involves filling the positions needed in the organization structure by appointing competent and qualified persons for the job.

The staffing process encompasses man power planning, recruitment, selection, and training.

a) Manpower requirements:

Manpower Planning which is also called as Human Resource Planning consists of putting right number of people, right kind of people at the right place, right time, doing the right things for which they are suited for the achievement of goals of the organization. The primary function of man power planning is to analyze and evaluate the human resources available in the organization, and to determine how to obtain the kinds of personnel needed to staff positions ranging from assembly line workers to chief executives.

b) Recruitment:

Recruitment is the process of finding and attempting to attract job candidates who are capable of effectively filling job vacancies. Job descriptions and job specifications are important in the Parliament, 1888 At Work Jerry Biberman, Michael D. Whitty, 2007 Making spirituality an integral part of the hectic workday is a key concern for the authors of At Work. They offer a number of solutions meant to help integrate these two worlds all with a common theme: the positive renewal and transformation of both worker and workplace. Carefully avoiding the pat answers of pop psychology, At Work is instead an in-depth read for teachers, consultants, and people interested in making their work environment a more healthful and compassionate one.
