

INTERNET FREEDOM MANIFESTO

The Netherlands needs an open internet; a platform where everyone can easily share and freely access information, a place where private communication remains private. Here are eleven items that should not be missing from any election program.

1. Stringently test any form of constitutional infringement

Necessity, proportionality, subsidiarity and effectiveness are preliminary requirements. Any constitutional infringements should be preceded by an impact assessment, comprising an identification of a time horizon and evaluation techniques, and must always be prescribed by law.

2. Privacy should be by design

IT systems of government and private industry should be built with privacy as a starting point. Principles such as anonymization, use limitation, data minimization, transparency and user-centric design are the key to protection. Databases containing the private information of millions of Dutch citizens should be optimally protected and scrutinized by regular audits. Existing systems that fail to implement any of the above, must be abolished or remodeled.

3. Give citizens control of their data

Citizens should have a better insight into and have more control over the use of data they enter on web services. Companies should only be allowed to process this data with explicit consent and clear policy on its usage. This should be closely monitored and enforced by the Dutch Data Protection Authority.

4. Guard privacy of communication

The Constitution should be adapted to protect all means of communication. Only when there is a substantial suspicion, a necessity for the investigation and confirmation by a judicial warrant, may the government conduct surveillance. Absolute transparency is required concerning the methods of investigation, particularly the use of wiretaps, spyware and any requests made for personal information. The use of encryption and the possibility to use the internet anonymously should not be hindered.

5. Protect freedom of information

All information in accordance with the law must be freely accessible to all Dutch citizens. Websites can not be forced to remove information without prior judicial approval. Permanent, indiscriminate monitoring or filtering of information must be prohibited. Social networks may only remove information in accordance with clear and consistent terms of service. Registration under a pseudonym must remain possible.

6. Do not store private communications

Under current European law, telecommunications companies are obligated to keep detailed logs of all their clients' communications along with the according locations for up to two years. This legislation does not benefit the security of the Netherlands, but does constitute a breach of privacy and freedom of communication of millions of Dutch people. The Dutch government should move to abolish the European data retention requirement and suspend these rules within the Netherlands.

7. Draft a balanced cyber security policy

A safe information society is paramount to our economy and democracy. The policies surrounding cyber security should not create a false sense of security, but actually protect our digital world and not infringe on our constitutional rights. Therefore, policies must be based on realistic and verifiable assessments of threats and risks. Any call for new surveillance powers must have a demonstrable necessity.

8. Modernize copyright legislation

Copyright was meant to stimulate the creation and sharing of culture. Now - in contrast - outdated measures are victimizing both artists, as well as non-artists. The Netherlands should seek out new business models to distribute creative works, such as films, music and books online. It should refrain from any measures that undermine the freedom of internet, such as rendering downloading illegal, blocking web sites, monitoring online activities or internet disconnection.

9. Protect net neutrality

Internet service providers must not be allowed to limit access to websites or bar the use of web services such as YouTube and Skype. Disallowing this will ensure the availability of the internet. It will lower the costs of communication and stimulate innovation. OPTA - the independent post and telecommunications authority - must enforce the recently introduced net neutrality legislation.

10. Oppose ACTA

The drafting process of ACTA has been highly controversial and the treaty itself presents a clear threat to internet freedom. Furthermore, ACTA will prevent the Netherlands in its development of modern policies to protect intellectual property. The Netherlands should not ratify ACTA and actively oppose any similar proposals.

11. Mandatory data breach notifications

Leakage of personal data greatly increases the risk of identity fraud and results in a fading of trust in information technology. The Netherlands must not wait for EU legislation and require the government and private industries to notify the people involved in case of unauthorized attempts to access personal information. A public registry of data breaches would hold organizations accountable and allow them to learn from each other's mistakes.

Yearbook on International Communist Affairs, 1977 Marxism Today, 1977 The Ideational Approach to Populism

Kirk A. Hawkins, Ryan E. Carlin, Levente Littvay, Cristóbal Rovira Kaltwasser, 2018-10-11 Populism is on the rise in Europe and the Americas. Scholars increasingly understand populist forces in terms of their ideas or discourse: one that envisions a cosmic struggle between the will of the common people and a conspiring elite. In this volume we advance populism scholarship by proposing a causal theory and methodological guidelines: a research program based on this ideational approach. This program argues that populism exists as a set of widespread attitudes among ordinary citizens and that these attitudes lie dormant until activated by weak democratic governance and policy failure. It offers methodological guidelines for scholars seeking to measure populist ideas and test their effects. And to ground the program empirically, it tests this theory at multiple levels of analysis using original data on populist discourse across European and US party systems; case studies of populist forces in Europe, Latin America, and the US; survey data from Europe and Latin America; and experiments in Chile, the US, and the UK. The result is a truly systematic comparative approach that helps answer questions about the causes and effects of populism.

Sibnarayan Ray, 2005 The Atlantic Monthly, 1899 August 1914

Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, 2014-08-07 One word of truth shall outweigh the whole world. Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn. In the first month of the First World War the Russian campaign against the Germans creaks into gear. Crippled by weak indecisive leadership the Russian troops battle desperately even as the inevitability of failure and their own sacrifice dawns. Solzhenitsyn's astounding work of historical fiction is a portrait of pre-revolutionary Russia, a tragic war story, and an epic novel in the great Russian tradition.
