Vestibular Reactions in Cat and Man During and After Angular Acceleration William Edward Collins, Fred E. Guedry (Jr.), 1967 Ocular nystagmus was recorded in darkness from cat and man during 4 deg sq sec accelerations about an Earth vertical axis Lateral canal stimulation yielded greater primary and secondary nystagmus than did vertical canal stimulation In cat both lateral and vertical canal responses to a 36 second stimuli peaked after 15 21 seconds of angular acceleration and this was followed by a steady decline Declines during acceleration were not apparent in nystagmus of man There was a more consistent secondary nystagmus in cat than in man In cat primary after nystagmus was greater following an 8 4 second stimulus than following a 36 second stimulus In man a like difference occurred in the sensation but was not present in nystagmus In this regard nystagmus from cat resembled the subjective reactions of man more than they did the nystagmus of man Author The JAG Journal, 1951 Letting the Cat Out of the Bag Siôn Rowlands, 2023-03-16 Trimming a parrot s beak emptying a dog s anal glands and neutering a cat then lunch followed by some tricky horse dentistry amputating a lamb s leg and calming a distressed client It s all in a day s work if you re a vet a delicate balance of managing animal welfare and ethics educating people in pet ownership and aligning their expectations with real life outcomes As a job it spans everything from managing the heartbreak of euthanasia to informing owners that under no circumstances should they take their dog s worming pills even if they re sure they have worms During his twenty five year career Welsh vet Siôn Rowlands has experienced almost every animal medical issue imaginable from rescuing an injured horse from the edge of a cliff to moisturizing a baby elephant He s also witnessed ridiculous moments surreal situations and the real toll it can take on a person Frank funny and moving in equal measure Letting the Cat Out of the Bag is a rare glimpse behind the scenes of the uniquely pressurised world of being a vet The Year of the Cat Rhiannon Lucy Cosslett, 2023-01-19 A brave process of healing and self reconstruction Observer Simply one of the best writers working today Here s to family to glamour and to love Nell Frizzell author of The Panic Years I looked around at my flat at the woodchip wallpaper and scuffed furniture and realised that I did have a life after all What it didn t have in it was a cat When Rhiannon fell in love with and eventually married her flatmate she imagined they might one day move on But this is London in the age of generation rent and so they share their home with a succession of friends and strangers while saving for a life less makeshift The desire for a baby is never far from the surface but can she be sure that she will ever be free of the anxiety she has experienced since an attack in the street one night And after a childhood spent caring for her autistic brother does she really want to devote herself to motherhood Moving through the seasons over the course of lockdown The Year of the Cat nimbly charts the way a kitten called Mackerel walked into Rhiannon s home and heart and taught her to face down her fears and appreciate quite how much love she had to offer A superbly written special book Olivia Sudjic author of Asylum Road Beautifully captures that liminal period before any life changing decision New Statesman The Nineteenth Century and After, 1883
