Abstract. This article focuses on the significance of research and development (R&D) in driving the internationalization of Polish high-tech firms. R&D is essential for businesses to remain competitive and adapt their products to the specific requirements of different markets. The study aims to investigate the relationship between R&D and the internationalization process of high-tech firms based in Poland, with a focus on the innovation context. We used a quantitative research method and employed a survey questionnaire to evaluate the internationalization of high-tech firms in Poland. The study employed a computer-assisted telephone interviewing (CATI) method and identified the random sample of 263 fully-filled questionnaires during the survey that were important for further statistical analysis. We confirmed that research and development as it is commonly understood, i.e., having one's own R&D department and making expenditures on R&D, helps and strengthens the internationalization of high-tech firms.

1. INTRODUCTION

Research and development (R&D) is vital to the internationalization of high-tech firms. In the fast-paced and ever-evolving world of high technology, businesses must continually innovate and develop new products and technologies to remain competitive (Sabatini et al., 2022). R&D is essential for high-tech businesses and industries as it enables them to develop new and improved products, enhance existing ones, and explore new markets (internationalize). When high-tech firms go international, they must adapt their products and technologies to satisfy the specific requirements of various markets (Ahi et al., 2022). In fact,
