J. Enna, Henry I. Yamamura, 1981 Since the discovery that neuronal transmission can be chemically mediated a large number of compounds have been found in the mammalian central nervous system which appear to function as neurotransmitter agents Recently electro physiological and biochemical methods have been developed which have enabled neuroscientists to classify better the myriad of neurotransmitter receptor sites in brain and to study their properties in finer detail As a result of these investigations a significant number of new discoveries have been made about the mechanisms involved in neurotransmitter receptor interactions the role neurotransmitters play in the actions of pharmacological agents and in the pathogenesis of various neuropsychiatric disorders The present two volume text was compiled to summarize the information relating to the physiological biochemical pharmacological and functional characteristics of neurotransmitter receptor sites While emphasis is placed on neurotransmitter receptors in the mammalian central nervous system the characteristics of these receptors in other species both vertebrate and invertebrate are also discussed where appropriate While these books cover the major classes of putative neurotransmitters amino acids peptides and biogenic amines and are therefore broad in scope each is discussed in a concise fashion to highlight the major points of historical and contemporary interest In addition to outlining data each chapter addresses current theories relating to the various aspects of receptor properties and function in an attempt to reveal the directions of future research and as a stimulus for other workers in the field Genetic Analysis of the Cell Surface P. Goodfellow, 1984-06-21 The cell surface is the barrier between the cell and its environment which regulates the flow of both simple and complex molecules into and out of the cell it is also the organelle responsible for communication between the cell and its environment Each cell expresses receptors for a wide variety of hormones growth factors growth substrates and other cells In multicellular organisms communication between cells is required for controlling development cellular differentiation morphogenesis and in a more general sense integration of myriad cell types into a single organism The series Receptors and Recognition has as its overall aim the dissection of the cell surface to correlate structure and function for this complex organelle In most of the preceding volumes the approach has been biochemical or physiological

In this volume the mammalian cell surface is analysed by a genetic approach Genetic analysis of the cell surface especially when combined with immuno logical techniques has a long history In 1900 Landsteiner showed that serum from one individual could agglutinate the red cells of another Besides the practical result of making blood transfusion safe this was the first demon stration of a human genetic polymorphism and for the next 50 years the red blood cell surface provided most of the genetic markers used to study human populations Taxis and Behavior G.
