"These Currents of Life " or Dating in the Times of Pandemic

Nina Krasikoff, 2022-01-26 The book is written in a crisp and dynamic language with sophisticated narratives framing a compelling cast of the well conceived characters It is enjoyable exploration of hilarity and frustration of digital dating in a current climate of pandemic concocted by an anonymous heroine yet representing a collective image of a single and lonely woman trapped in a small space in front of a glowing screen whose longings were tempered down to the culture of site dating in search for a virtual rendezvous The heroine is drawn in a realm of flowing fantasies where she is vocalizing rather speechless cornucopia of suitors by loud and attractive narratives encapsulating the essence of each suitor in compactly written vignettes Some of them are softly charged with sensuality and others are written in a lyrical scrap to expose their originality and triviality as well The abundance of hilarious humor creating a pitch perfect moment to compensate deteriorating loneliness of lockdown The structure of the book does not require to know what comes before or follow after just a smoothly flowing colorful paragraphs exploring love sex vulnerability emotional void mystery of imagination materialism and rationality of digital dating
