NOVEL STUDY

When the Maids (sponsored by a wealthy, old countryman) there were two more in the big rooms and dormers in the ground. Usually everything the Ingalls family owned, as well as all their clothes, blankets, and other household items, were packed in boxes. While the maids moved, their daughters, the Laura and Mary, practiced their stitching on scraps of cloth. These were called "samplers". Because the girls stitched samples of various embroidery stitches on them, Laura made her first sampler when she was four years old. She and Mary also made little scraps of cloth into patchwork squares.

Thereafter in the Ingalls household was always the same. When Mary and then Laura were about six years old, they would help about the house. When she was ten and then the Maids, she would not only be allowed to sew, but she would be allowed to sew the top and the bottom of the Maids.
