Discovery Tea Lanišnik Rížner, Walter Jäger, Csilla Özvegy-Laczka,2019-07-10 Steroid hormones have important roles in human physiology but they are also implicated in the development of hormone dependent cancers and various non malignant diseases Furthermore changes in the concentrations of steroid hormones have important effects on the homeostasis of pre and post menopausal women as well as of men in andropause The associations of steroid hormones with pathophysiological processes and the altered mechanisms of their actions in disease are still not completely understood It has been known for more than thirty years that in addition to their endocrine activity steroid hormones act in an intracrine manner. In target organs active androgens and estrogens can be formed from inactive or less active precursor steroid hormones mainly dehydroepiandrosterone sulfate (DHEA-S) and estrone sulfate (E1-S) after their translocation into cells through the transporter proteins of the organic anion transporting polypeptide (OATP) and organic anion transporter (OAT) families. The combination of altered uptake of precursors changed activation and action of estrogens and androgens in concert with the changes in the metabolism and excretion may thus have major roles in the development of hormone dependent malignant and non-malignant diseases. To date the salient roles of the individual players in disease pathophysiology have not been precisely defined. The aim of this Research Topic is thus to highlight the progress made in the field of steroid transport and intracrine actions and metabolism with special emphasis on the involvement of these processes in the pathophysiology of hormone dependent disorders and on the identification of novel drug targets.

Thomas James, Luciano Martini, 1971 Information concerning localization of exogenously administered tritium-labeled steroid hormones in the brain by dry mount autoradiography was presented. Estrogens, androgens, and glucocorticoids were found to be concentrated and retained in nuclei of certain neurons. The autoradiographic information on the topographic distribution of hormone neurons, which concentrate, retain, and respond in a specific manner to hormones, suggested that feedback areas for the regulation of endocrine glands are not restricted to the hypothalamus and preoptic region. It appeared that gonadotropin and neurons that regulate sexual behavior were widespread within the phylogenetically ancient periventricular brain following the origin, the termination, and to some degree the path of certain nerve fiber tracts. In the case of estradiol and androgen, likely to be involved are the stria terminalis, the ventral amygdalohypothalamic pathway, a portion of the fornix, the periventricular bundle, and others. Hormone neurons have been found only in the periventricular brain but not in the neopallium. It was concluded that the hypophysiotropic area is probably not restricted to a limited hypothetical segment of the hypothalamus but is identical with the multiple sites of autoradiographically defined hormone neurons within the phylogenetically older periventricular brain.
