N. Capon, 2012-12-06 Business and management education has an important impact on business practice throughout the world To a very large extent possession of the MBA degree is a passport into the upper reaches of management and CEOs of many major corporations have earned an MBA It is a reasonable inference that the education received by these leaders and managers during their MBA experience has an important impact on the way that businesses throughout the world are led and managed and that major corporate decisions are made The heart of the MBA education is the curriculum and curriculum design is perhaps the most important strategic function for a business school faculty to undertake In order to understand the many issues concerning this contemporary curriculum review this book examines three related contextual domains First it details the long term growth of business and management education Second it examines the major theoretical and empirical literatures on organizational evolution and decision making paying special attention to decision making in institutions of higher education Finally the book describes the previous major curriculum review at Columbia Business School in the late 1950s and the subsequent changes that formed the curriculum that was changed in 1992 This book demonstrates what can be achieved by an institution that sets high standards for its business education and assists faculty and administrators in other schools of business and management as they contemplate revision of their curricula In addition it provides a prime example of curriculum design effort in one of the leading institutions worldwide Finally it will be of interest to scholars in several different fields notably higher education curriculum review organizational decision making and long run organizational evolution

New Enterprises and Small Business Management Paul Donham, John S. Day, 1959 School Reform, Corporate Style Dorothy Shipps, 2006 Like other big city school systems, Chicago's has been repeatedly reformed over the last century.
Yet its schools have fallen far short of citizens' expectations and left a gap between the performances of white and minority students. Many blame the educational establishment for resisting change. Other critics argue that reform occurs too often, still others claim it comes not often enough. Dorothy Shipps reappraises the tumultuous history of educational progress in Chicago, revealing that the persistent lack of improvement is due not to the extent but rather the type of reform. Throughout the twentieth century, managerial reorganizations initiated by the business community repeatedly altered the governance structure of schools as well as the relationships of teachers to children and parents but brought little improvement while other more promising reform models were either resisted or crowded out. Shipps chronicles how Chicago's corporate actors led, abetted, or restrained nearly every attempt to transform the city's school system, then asks whether schools might be better reformed by others. To show why city schools have failed urban children so badly, she traces Chicago's reform history over four political eras, revealing how corporate power was instrumental in designing and revamping the system. Her narrative encompasses the formative era of 1880-1930 when teachers' unions moderated business plans; previously unexplored business activism from 1930 to 1980 when civil rights dominated school reform and the decentralization of the 1980s. She also covers the uneasy cooperation among business associations in the 1990s to install the mayor as head of the school system, a governing regime now challenged by privatization advocates. Business people may be too wedded to a stunted view of educators to forge a productive partnership for change. Unionized teachers bridle at the second-class status accorded them by managers. If reform is to reach deeply into classrooms, Shipps concludes, it might well require a new coalition of teachers' unions and parents to create a fresh agenda that supersedes corporate interests. This study clearly shows that in Chicago, as elsewhere, urban schooling is intertwined with politics and power. By reviewing more than a century of corporate efforts to make education work, Shipps makes a strong case that it's high time to look elsewhere, perhaps to educators themselves, for new leadership. Subject Catalog of the Institute of Governmental Studies Library, University of
