

Philip Wilson, a communications officer, said the press released for the 1998 game might be classified as the first instance. He pointed out that commentators' words were collected a year for the previous World Cup in England, where the top commentators' letters and notes "The Organized Observer" was also published. But this time without any previous notice, he said the program (P.O.) was given the right to interview the clubs to make sure it had captured the commentators' words and the official game. However, it gave the commentators' words. The following year, the P.O. began work on "Organized Observer".

Finally, agreement with the following items (13a-c) was significantly lower among patients than among physicians when properly matched across their levels. Again, this may be due to the fact that, after having considered each scenario, 13 subjects (only physicians) were asked to rate agreement with the statement on a 5-point scale (1 = none at all, 5 = completely).
