Soviet American Relations In The 1980s Super Power Politics And East West Trade:

The Soviet Paradox Seweryn Bialer,1987 This is the best account to date of Soviet politics between the time of Brezhnev's death and Gorbachev's first year. The central theme concerns the tension between the imperatives of fundamental reform and the regime's basic intention to avoid it. Bialer presents a Soviet leadership in transition confronting a series of intractable foreign policy problems. Some readers will find his judgments controversial e.g. that American analysts consistently overestimate Soviet military strength or that lacking detente of the 1970s Soviet policy would have been more adventurous than it was. Nevertheless Bialer's description of Soviet American misperceptions lends forceful credence to a prescription of arms reduction and managed rivalry.
