Thomson,2020-09-28 The first request for a protectorate was made to a missionary as early as 1859 when the people were in the first heat of conversion to Christianity this seems to have gone no further But King Fata iki's letter reached its destination and England the first kingdom of all the kingdoms of the world England the earth hungry and insatiable as others see her took thirteen years to think it over and then having received a second letter more precisely worded reluctantly consented It is an object lesson of the way in which we blunder into Empire It was not until the Germans began to develop their plantations in Samoa that Niu was discovered to have a value The Polynesian races as everybody knows are a picturesque easy going and leisure loving people too fond of home to travel and too indolent to do a steady day's work A dash of some alien blood as yet unrecognised has played strange freaks with the men of Niu Alone among Polynesian races they opposed the landing of Europeans alone they love to engage as labourers far from home and show both at home and abroad a liking for hard work no other island race has the commercial instinct so keenly developed The number of them working in Samoa has increased so rapidly in recent years that their houses form a distinct quarter of the town of Apia and when the recent troubles broke out they went in a body to the British Vice Consul and claimed his protection as British subjects It was hard to turn away people who were fellow subjects by inclination and to put the case at its lowest our need of plantation labourers is tenfold greater than the Germans And so when we had to receive from Germany an equivalent for the surrender of our claims in Samoa Niu was thrown into our side of the scale in what is known as the Samoa Convention 1899 and it became my duty when negotiating a British protectorate over the independent kingdom of Tonga in 1900 to visit the island and announce a favourable answer to the petition forwarded thirteen years before So little was known of the lonely island that we approached it with mixed feelings anxiety on the part of the captain and high curiosity in those unconcerned with the navigation of the ship There were indeed other feelings among our company for we had been plunging into a strong head sea ever since we left the shelter of a Tongan harbour and H M S Porpoise has a reputation as a sea boat on which it would be charitable not to enlarge The island has never been surveyed indeed the greater part of it is still indicated in the chart by a dotted line and the brief paragraph devoted to it in the Sailing Directions is not encouraging to navigators While the wind was in the east a precarious anchorage might be found at more than one point on the western side but let the wind shift to the west and you were on a lee shore of precipitous cliffs The Coral Island; A Tale of the Pacific Ocean R.
