Phylogenetic Inference of the Tibeto-Burman Languages Or on the Usefulness of Lexicostatistics (and "megalo"-comparison) for the Subgrouping of Tibeto-Burman

Damian Satterthwaite-Phillips,2011 It has been argued that lexicostatistical methods cannot be fruitfully applied to the Tibeto Burman or the larger Sino Tibetan language family This dissertation first develops a statistical method for determining linguistic cognates or sound correspondences between arbitrarily many languages This method is then applied to a subset of the Sino Tibetan languages to infer the correspondences and further develops a method for lexicostatistical analysis for subgrouping those languages The output of these methods agrees very well with that determined by the traditional comparative method Furthermore this method yields both greater resolution of the subgroupings and provides statistical inference of the confidence in the various groupings ruling military regime This is not surprising in a country where 30% of the population and much of the land area are non Burman and where contradictory tendencies towards regional separatism versus unitary rule have divided the people since before independence In what is probably the most comprehensive study of Burma s ethnic minorities to date this volume discusses the historical formation of ethnic identity and its complexities in relation to British colonial rule as well as to the modern state the present situation of military rule and its policy of Myanmarification Changes of identity in exile and due to religious conversion are also analysed and discussed Finally the book deals with relevant and recent anthropological and sociological theoretical discussions on the ethnic identity boundaries and space of all the main ethnic groups in Burma It probes into the complexity and diversity of ethnicity in Burma and it provides more details and up to date information than
