The vestibular system is responsible for maintaining balance and orientation. It consists of the utricle, saccule, and three semicircular canals. The utricle and saccule are part of the otolith organs, which detect linear acceleration and head position relative to gravity. The three semicircular canals detect rotation in three different planes. The fluid inside the canals moves when the head rotates, creating a pressure difference that stimulates the hair cells in the ampullae. This information is then sent to the brain, which uses it to maintain balance and orientation.
