Because of the importance of the first impression and the nature of the subject, the most common strategy seems to be the avoidance of the question. This approach is not unusual, but it is a strategy that can easily lead to a misconception about the underlying thought or feeling of the questioner. In this situation, the best approach is to ask a question that is specific and direct, and then follow up with a general inquiry. This approach can help to clarify the questioner's thoughts and feelings, and can also provide the questioner with the opportunity to express their concerns and needs. It is important to remember that the questioner's needs and concerns are the primary focus of the conversation, and that the questioner's needs and concerns should be the primary focus of the response. This approach can help to build trust and respect between the questioner and the responder, and can also help to ensure that the questioner's needs and concerns are met.
