

Smart technology remains relatively vague in terms of the comprehensive identification, as a  HEALTHGRATE general set of rules, smart technology is a term referring to interconnected devices that perform functions with greater degree of autonomy as compared to their non-smart devices, smart technology utilises two core technologies in the architecture:

Integration of Computing technology:

Smart technology possesses computer technology, the integration of computing technology in a technology that prior did not possess the architecture is a preliminary step towards acquiring smart capabilities.

- Embedded systems: Embedded systems are computer systems consisting of identifiable distinct, dedicated computer hardware & software, utilised as part of a device to fulfil functionalities, and often has real time computing capabilities. Often the embedded systems perform dedicated tasks in some encompassing larger system: the system may be mechanical or electrical, optical, etc. Embedded systems are complex and are acquiring various functionalities associated with computers, resulting in a spectrum.

- Internet of things (IOT) integration: IOT networks enable physical devices to connect to the internet, enabling effective communication.
