

Fundamental Concepts of Spatial Conservation Prioritization

Kerrie A. Wilson, Mar Cabeza, and Carissa J. Klein

2.1 Introduction

The conservation of biodiversity is constrained by limited resources, and hence our investments in conservation must be prioritized. Spatial conservation prioritization is the process of using spatial analysis of quantitative data to identify locations for conservation investment. The process is regarded as more systematic, rigorous, and accountable than the opportunistic allocation of conservation funds (Margules and Pressey 2000). Priority areas can be identified not only for protected area establishment but also for investment in a variety of conservation activities, ranging from fire management and invasive species control, to land restoration (Wilson et al. 2007) (Chapters 3 and 12). Since its origin in the early 1980s, the field of spatial conservation prioritization has influenced planning processes, the development of conservation policies, and the expansion of protected areas. As a consequence, the number of publications concerning the development and application of spatial prioritization techniques has increased rapidly over the past two decades (Chapters 1 and 19).

With increasing interest in quantitative techniques and tools, a plethora of principles and terms surrounding the field of spatial conservation prioritization has arisen. This is to be expected with any expanding field, particularly one which extends a range of disciplines and sectors. Terms such as complementarity, comprehensiveness, representativeness, and irreplaceability have been reviewed elsewhere (Margules and Pressey 2000; Possingham et al. 2006; Margules and Sarkar 2007). Principles such as cost efficiency, threat, adequacy, and vulnerability are receiving increasing attention. The terms and principles reviewed in this chapter are used throughout this book and many are described mathematically in Chapters 3–5. In this chapter we define these principles and terms in an accessible manner, explore their meaning using examples and case studies, and provide operational definitions to inform future prioritization analyses.

2.2 Key principles of spatial conservation prioritization

2.2.1 Comprehensiveness, representativeness, and surrogacy – sampling the full range and characteristic examples of biodiversity

In simple terms, a comprehensive network of priority areas is one that includes a portion of every biodiversity feature. More broadly the notion of comprehensiveness in conservation prioritization implies sampling the full range of biodiversity taking into account composition (e.g. species and genetic diversity), structure (e.g. habitat types), and function (e.g. recruitment and dispersal processes) (Noss 1990). In addition, each biodiversity feature protected should ideally be representative of that feature.

While spatial conservation prioritization requires spatial information about the distribution of biodiversity, our knowledge of the biodiversity on earth is remarkably poor. This problem has two key elements, termed ‘Linnean’ and ‘Wallacean’ shortfalls (Whittaker et al. 2005). The Linnean shortfall refers to our lack of knowledge of how many, and what kind, of species there are. The Wallacean shortfall

The Conservation Of Conservation The Childs Acquisition Of A Fundamental Concept:

The Conservation of Conservation Adrien Pinard, Moral Dilemmas and Ethical Reasoning Carol

Harding, 2017-07-05 This book deals with moral dilemmas and the development of ethical reasoning in two senses First the editor focuses on dilemmas both real and hypothetical which require moral judgments The Heinz dilemma part of Kohlberg s scoring system for level of moral development is in some cases used as a point of departure for discussion Problems with this particular dilemma as a scoring item are examined in detail along with problems generated by similar dilemmas for moral reasoning in everyday life Those who study moral reasoning and its development are in somewhat of a dilemma as they attempt to integrate information from the domains of philosophy and psychology These essays investigate domain issues in varied cultural settings and across genders and age ranges for what have been proposed as universals in moral judgment as well as formulate theories that reflect both empirical evidence and logical process The essays share a conception of human nature as inherently social as well as a healthy respect for the problems or dilemmas which human sociality carries in its wake Some of these problems are theoretical such as those having to do with the moral reasoning or the classic issues of values justification Other problems are practical such as those having to do with distributive justice or methods of moral education This volume will shed light on the process of resolving dilemmas both within philosophy and psychology The conservation of conservation (La conservation de la conservation, engl.)
