process that the U S Social Security Administration SSA uses to determine eligibility for disability benefits from the Disability Insurance DI and Supplemental Security Income SSI programs We study a subset of individuals from the Health and Retirement Study HRS who applied for DI or SSI benefits between 1992 and 1996 We compare the SSA s ultimate award decision i e after allowing for appeals to the applicant s self reported disability status We use these data to estimate classification error rates under the hypothesis that applicants self reported disability status and the SSA s ultimate award decision are noisy but unbiased indicators of a latent true disability status indicator We find that approximately 20% of SSI DI applicants who are ultimately awarded benefits are not disabled and that 60% of applicants who were denied benefits are disabled Our analysis also yields insights into the patterns of self selection induced by varying delays and award probabilities at various levels of the application and appeal process We construct an optimal statistical screening rule using a subset of objective health indicators that the SSA uses in making award decisions that results in significantly lower classification error rates than does SSA s current award process
