Until recently the philosophy and history of science proceeded in a separate way from the philosophy and history of technology and indeed with respect to both science and technology philosophical and historical inquiries were also following their separate ways Now we see in the past quarter century how the philosophy of science has been profoundly influenced by historical studies of the sciences and no longer concerned so single mindedly with the analysis of theory and explanation with the relation between hypotheses and experimental observation Now also we see the traditional historical studies of technology supplemented by philosophical questions and no longer so plainly focussed upon contexts of application on invention and practical engineering and on the mutually stimulating relations between technology and society Further alas the neat division of intellectual labor those clearly drawn distinctions between science and technology between the theoretical and the applied between discovery and justification between internalist and externalist approaches all have become muddled Partly this is due to internal revolutions within the philosophy and history of science the first result being recognition of their mutual relevance Partly however this state of muddle is due to external factors science at the least in the last half century has become so intimately connected with technology and technological developments have created so many new fields of scientific and philosophical inquiry that any critical reflection on scientific and technological endeavors must henceforth take their interaction into account      The Computerized Society Edward Cornish, 1985      The Computerized Society Edward Cornish, 1985      Computer Science in Social and Behavioral Science Education Daniel Edgar Bailey, 1978      TRON Project 1989 Ken Sakamura, 2012-12-06

It is almost six years since the inauguration of the TRON project a concept first proposed by Dr K Sakamura of the University of Tokyo and it is almost 2 years since the foundation of the TRON Association on March 1988 The number of regular member companies registered in the TRON Association as of November 1988 is 145 which is a new record for the Association Some of this year's major activities that I would particularly like to mention are Over 50 TRON project related products have been or are about to be introduced to the marketplace according to a preliminary report from the Future Study Committee of the TRON Association In particular I am happy to say that the ITRON subproject which is ahead of the other subprojects has progressed so far that several papers on ITRON applications will be presented at this conference which means that the ITRON specifications are now ready for application to embedded commercial and industrial products      Handbook of Research on Education and
