Soft-skills training, locus of control, and labor market outcomes of youth: Evidence from a randomized intervention in Kenya

Abay, Kibrom A., Alzua, Maria Laura, Barasa, Laura, Machio, Phyllis

Mumia, Tabe-Ojong, Martin Paul Jr., 2024-12-10 Africa has the youngest population in the world but African economies are not creating enough high productivity jobs and rates of youth unemployment thus remain a major challenge in the region. Several supply and demand side factors may explain these trends including skill gaps. While traditional technical and vocational education and training TVET centers address important gaps in hard technical skills, soft skills trainings have not yet received sufficient attention in the African context. We evaluate the overall and heterogeneous impact of a gender sensitive soft skills training that aimed to address youths unique interests, preferences and labor market constraints in Kenya. We also examine whether the presence or absence of complementary noncognitive skills such as locus of control skills moderates the impact of the soft skills training. We use a randomized controlled trial to evaluate the effectiveness of a soft skills training to support young men and women in making the transition from school to work in Kenya. Our evaluation combines baseline, midline and endline data to understand the dynamics of labor market transitions for youth. We find that although the soft skills training prepared youth for the labor market by improving their willingness, expectations and preparedness for jobs, the impact of the soft skills training on ultimate labor market outcomes varies across individuals with varying psychological traits. The training improved labor market outcomes for those with internal locus of control but not for individuals who lack these attributes. One standard deviation increase in internal locus of control is associated with a 5 percentage point increase in the impact of the soft skills training on probability of participation in income earning activities. We also find that returns to locus of control and the soft skills training are higher for females than males.

Making Learning Stick

Barbara Carnes, 2010 Training

professionals know that one of the gold standards of success is getting learning to take ensuring that much of what is learned in the training room or online actually gets applied on the job where it counts. Make Learning Stick is a practical, easy to use resource aimed at helping trainers hit that sweet spot of application. Readers will find a treasure trove of techniques based on author Barbara Carnes more than 25 years of experience, much of it focusing squarely on getting people to take what they learn away from the training room and apply it on the job. This book includes updated versions of classic techniques paired with new technology based training methods.

National Commission for Employment Policy, 1988 Evidence-based Training Methods Ruth Colvin Clark, 2010 Thanks to a growing body of research evidence we've learned a great deal in the last 20 years about which methods really work when training people. Yet many trainers still use time honored methods and assume they work despite recent evidence to the contrary. Whether you're a classroom instructor, training manager or designer of e learning, your training will be more effective when you base your methods on evidence. With this book as your guide, you can thoroughly incorporate evidence and learning psychology into your program design, development and delivery decisions. You'll save your organization time and money wasted on training fads that don't work and invest resources more productively in proven training methods.
