

UNDERSTANDING PREHISTORIC TECHNOLOGY: The Evolution of Hunting Technologies in the Pacific Northwest

Presentation by Daniel Meatte, Archaeologist, Washington State Parks

This talk examines the prehistoric technology used to build and fashion Native American hunting weapons common to the Pacific Northwest. Hundreds of artifacts, weapons and tools are displayed during this presentation, affording the audience a chance to handle and examine this remarkable equipment up close. Samples of the materials used to make this gear – bone, wood, minerals, sinew, pigments, feathers, oils, etc. – are also displayed. Together, these items represent over 12,000 years of technological change. Understanding the knowledge and skills necessary to build, use and repair this gear provides greater insight about Washington's First Peoples.
