Television And The Household:

Make Room for TV Lynn Spigel, 1992-06 Between 1948 and 1955 nearly two thirds of all American families bought a television set and a revolution in social life and popular culture was launched. In this fascinating book Lynn Spigel chronicles the enormous impact of television in the formative years of the new medium. However, over the course of a single decade television became an intimate part of everyday life. What did Americans expect from it? What effects did the new daily ritual of watching television have on children? Was television welcomed as an unprecedented window on the world or as a one-eyed monster that would disrupt households and corrupt children? Drawing on an ambitious array of unconventional sources from sitcom scripts to articles and advertisements in women's magazines, Spigel offers the fullest available account of the popular response to television in the postwar years. She chronicles the role of television as a focus for evolving debates on issues ranging from the ideal of the perfect family and changes in women's role within the household to new uses of domestic space. The arrival of television did more than turn the living room into a private theater; it offered a national stage on which to play out and resolve conflicts about the way Americans should live. Spigel chronicles this lively and contentious debate as it took place in the popular media. Of particular interest is her treatment of the way in which the phenomenon of television itself was constantly deliberated from how programs should be watched to where the set was placed to whether Mom, Dad, or kids should control the dial. Make Room for TV combines a powerful analysis of the growth of electronic culture with a nuanced social history of family life in postwar America, offering a provocative glimpse of the way television became the mirror of so many of America's hopes and fears and dreams.

Media, Children, and the Family Dolf Zillmann, Jennings Bryant, Aletha C. Huston, 2013-11-05 This book brings together a group of scholars to share findings and insights on the effects of media on children and family. Their contributions reflect not only widely divergent political orientations and value systems but also three distinct domains of inquiry into human motivation and behavior: social scientific, psychodynamic, or psychoanalytical, and clinical practice. Each of these three domains is privy to important evidence and insights that need to transcend epistemological and methodological boundaries if understanding of the subject is to improve dramatically. In keeping with this notion, the editors asked the authors to go beyond a summary of findings and lend additional distinction to the book by applying the binoculars of their particular perspective and offering suggestions as to the implications of their findings. One of the goals of the conference that resulted in this book was consensus building in the area of media and family. From examining the findings and insights of a diverse group of scholars, it seems that consensus building in several areas is a distinct possibility. Addressing the concerns of educators about the influence of the mass media of communication entertainment programs, in particular, on children and the welfare of the nuclear family, this volume projects directions for superior programming, especially for educational television. The influence of sex and violence on children and adults is given much attention and the development of moral judgment and sexual expectations among other things is explored. The critical analysis of media effects includes examination of positive contributions of the media such as the search for missing children and exemplary educational programs Television and Radio Coverage of the House United States.
