PROLOGUE

 Although I often think the way I usually do, the reason this chapter would be no more like Price's Part is it uses this form. The reader has received some history and would expect an easy introduction. This form both creates and distinguishes the Price approach, without necessarily revealing the author's identity. The reader will notice the author's handwriting, which is the same as the Price signature. Price uses this self-referential writing to identify himself as the author of the book. The reader will also notice the author's handwriting, which is the same as the Price signature. Price uses this self-referential writing to identify himself as the author of the book.
