

These ideas are not new. In 1970, the National Commission on Libraries and Information Services (NCLIS) issued a report entitled Information for the Future that recommended the use of computers to store and retrieve information. The report also recommended that the government establish a national computer network to facilitate the exchange of information between government agencies. The report was widely criticized for being too vague and for not providing specific recommendations. In 1972, the NCLIS issued a follow-up report entitled Information for the Future: A Plan of Action that provided more specific recommendations. The report recommended that the government establish a national computer network to facilitate the exchange of information between government agencies. The report also recommended that the government develop a national information policy to ensure that information is used effectively and efficiently. The report was widely criticized for being too vague and for not providing specific recommendations.

From a personal and professional point of view, I am very grateful to the University of Cambridge for the award of a Research Studentship, which has enabled me to complete this work.
