While the presence of a non-unionized workforce is negatively related to the probability of a firm being a union member, the presence of a unionized workforce is positively related to the probability of a firm being a non-union member. This suggests that the presence of a unionized workforce is a more significant factor in a firm's decision to become a non-union member than the presence of a non-unionized workforce is in a firm's decision to become a union member.
